The Corona pandemic is greatly changing the landscape of retail. More and more consumers are ordering their products online, as the lockdown means that brick-and-mortar stores have to remain closed for the most part or can only open to a very limited extent. In addition, customer demands are also increasing – as waiting times are only accepted to a limited extent or not at all. In order to generate more sales during this time and in the future, Nextrade clients can have products sent directly to their customers via dropshipping through Nextrade.

The original idea behind this service goes back to the dropshipping trade of the 1950s and experienced a recent boom, not least due to online trading. On Nextrade, dropshipping now offers retailers an optimal service: The brands take care of shipping the products directly to the end customer. They thus offer stores individual purchasing conditions and provide them with all relevant product data. In this way, they enable stationary retailers to look for a product directly on Nextrade and together with the customer, order it, and send it directly to the customer. This reduces any possible loss of time and makes convenience a reality for the customer. This makes the platform even more attractive for the stationary retail trade.

Dropshipping on Nextrade – The easy way to expand your business

"The dropshipping function is a real added value for our customers, as it can be perfectly integrated into the stationary business. The retailer has access to the brand's entire product range. This means that the service for the end customer can be optimized. Also, the retailer together with the brand use the entire sales potential," says Nicolaus Gedat, Managing
